DEMAND REAL PREVENTION

Somewhere in Canada today a worker will die on the job. Others will succumb to a work-related disease. Thousands more will suffer an injury that will be permanent and life-altering. This is unacceptable.

Preventing worker suffering and pursuing health and safety excellence involves much more than chasing paper, completing checklists and cashing rebate cheques.

Real health and safety programs protect all workers, no matter their employment status or where they work. Superior health and safety prevention programs begin by protecting the most vulnerable. They also include:

- Full employer accountability, beyond legal minimums
- Meaningful worker participation
- Properly trained and functioning joint health and safety committees and workplace representatives
- Quality training focused on workplace hazards, not worker behaviours
- Hazard controls that protect workers, their families and their communities.

On April 28, our National Day of Mourning for workers injured, killed or made ill because of hazardous workplace exposures we do not forget them and we will not stop until all workers are protected.

By law, employers must provide their workers with general and job specific instruction and training including but not limited to:

- GHS-WHMIS
- Worker Awareness
- Working at Heights
- Safe Lockout-Tagout
- Confined Space Entry
- Transportation of Dangerous Goods
- Workplace Violence and Harassment
- Mobile Equipment Operator Competency
- JHSC Certification Parts I & II and Refresher.

Not sure if your workplace complies with all legal training requirements?
