

Workers Health & Safety Centre (WHSC) recognizes that we conduct business across Ontario on the traditional territories and lands of 133 First Nations. These First Nations have come to share this land with the Inuit and Metis people. Forty-six treaties cover the relationship and responsibilities between First Nations people in Ontario and the federal government. These treaties form the basis of the relationship between all Indigenous and non-Indigenous people. At WHSC we also work in partnership with many Indigenous organizations, aiming to help pave a way toward healing and reconciliation.

BENEFITS OF QUALITY HEALTH AND SAFETY TRAINING

As well as meeting legal training obligations, effective health and safety training can help improve working conditions. It can help:

- ▶ workplace parties understand and carry out their legal rights and duties.
- ▶ support the effectiveness of joint health and safety committees and representatives.
- ▶ ensure worker and supervisor competency.
- ▶ bolster overall workplace prevention programs.
- ▶ reduce work-related injury, illness, and death by identifying and controlling workplace hazards.

WHAT QUALITY TRAINING LOOKS LIKE

All WHSC courses, whether delivered virtually or in-person, are led by highly qualified and experienced instructors helping to ensure critical learning is achieved. All courses are delivered using adult education techniques where highly interactive sessions ensure participants build upon their collective experiences of the workplace to devise real-world strategies for safer, healthier work.

For virtual classes, participants need access to a high-speed internet connection and a computer with a functioning camera, speakers, and microphone. To help ensure the integrity of the learning experience, smartphones are not permitted.
