

Worker Health and Safety Awareness

Program Duration: 3 hours

This foundational program is perfectly suited to new workplace entrants or as a regular review for existing employees. With this program, employers will meet a specific legal duty to ensure workers complete basic occupational health and safety awareness training. Further, it assists employers in fulfilling their general duty to provide health and safety information and instruction to workers.

Health and Safety Policy and Program

The training program reviews the key elements of an effective health and safety program and the important roles of workers, supervisors, employers and health and safety representatives. An effective workplace health and safety program includes reporting, inspecting, assessing, controlling, communicating, learning and other crucial elements. The training program discusses these elements and prompts discussion and understanding of who carries out these important roles in an effective workplace program. When all program roles are carried out, workers will return home safe and healthy each day.

Hazard-Specific Programs

Participants will also discuss the various hazard-specific programs, such as GHS WHMIS, confined space entry, lockout and workplace violence and harassment, that may be required for their workplace. These specific programs, which are set out in the Occupational Health and Safety Act, regulations and industry standards, are reviewed and linked to the workplace program and workplace roles.

Controlling and Eliminating Hazards

The goal of any health and safety program is to control and eliminate hazards. Through this training, workers learn and apply the elements of health and safety theory that helps them identify hazards and effective controls. Safety hazards may be the most obvious hazards and the most simple to address. However, they are not responsible for most workplace injuries or deaths. Participants learn to identify the less visible hazards, such as violence, chemicals and poor ergonomics and what can be done about them.

Accessible Resources

Training participants will take away a handy pocket-sized resource booklet perfect for ready access in the workplace and for sharing with others.
